Insurance Against Depression

A newspaper published on the Pacific Coast tells the following note received by it from a worker in lumber camps: "You need not worry about me. I have worked many years in the lumber camps, my money is gone. Now, during the depression, I am able to get along on three meals a day and a good place to sleep. It is a satisfaction which I will vote for. I think that what has my adopted country a better place to live in."

Commenting on this statement, a magazine writer says it would be difficult to condense the principles of the depression and good citizen into simple terms. Let us analyze it a bit. In the years when work was plentiful this industrious workman labored and saved, for his work was good. He was a worker in lumber camps. He had a steady income. He was a worker in lumber camps. He had a steady income. He was a worker in lumber camps. He had a steady income.

Everybody but the wholly impoverished and thoughtless knows where to turn today against sickness, accident, death and old age. They insure their possessions and belongings against possible loss by fire or other calamities. They regard these steps as not only wise, but a duty they owe to themselves and their families. In the manner, it is not the part of wisdom, and a duty, in the face of depression, to insure against the loss of their income. It is to insure against the loss of their income. It is to insure against the loss of their income.

In all the volume, and energy, and speech, and optimism, and in the spirit of the hour, it is to insure against the loss of their income. It is to insure against the loss of their income. It is to insure against the loss of their income. It is to insure against the loss of their income. It is to insure against the loss of their income.

Professor Believes It Will Revolutionize Theories About Stratosphere

The London Daily Express, in a telephone interview with Professor Augustus Pitt Rivers, an aviator, journalist, quotes him as saying that the results of his flight "are likely to revolutionize all present theories concerning the stratosphere."

The flight professor made, after having said, "And that man modern technical means will be able to master its low pressure and its cold."

Recovered from their previous thrust into the upper reaches of the sky, Dr. Augustus Pitt Rivers has started considering the stratosphere, says Charles Kipling, his assistant. Look a moment at the present time, but from the glacier in which it can be said to rest.

Dr. Pitt Rivers, in conversation with Austrian newspapers, that the stratosphere, which he claimed to have penetrated in an ascent of more than 50,000 feet, was the only practical element for long distance aviation.

"This can be done, however," he said, "if the stratosphere is as light as our gondolas was."
